

CDs are dead? Starbucks Musique Pop de Paris

Written by Claire Perkins

CDs are dead?

Somehow, Starbucks is still able to sell Compact Discs.

The only CDs I've bought in the past 5 years have been courtesy of creepy Starbucks. It's a funny combo of the fresh and exciting cover art, obscure and can't-find-it-anywhere-else tracks and the fact that you're just waiting for your latte, anyway, that contribute to the repeated CD purchases, I believe.

Past fantasy CDs I've accumulated include Glam Rock, a compilation of tons of Freddie Mercury-esque tunes, special Burt Bacharach hits, Michael Buble nonsense and now Musique Pop de Paris, an adorable collection of French pop music from the 1960s. It features yé-yé rock, a style similar to go-go music that combines early rock and Gallic elements.

It sounds as cute as the album cover looks.

Starbucks, $13.