

Best Spots to See Wildflowers in Arizona

Written by Kyley Warren

Monday, 15 April 2019 08:36 - Last Updated Thursday, 18 April 2019 12:11

Imagine colorful wildflower palettes painted across the desert floors, with backdrops of piercing buttes and rocky, mountainous terrains accentuating the blooming beauties. This dream is an actual reality at dozens of secret hot spots and natural wildlife parks across the state.

We've rounded up a few of the very best places to catch a glimpse of authentic, spring scenery in Arizona this year.

Lost Dutchman State Park

Hikers and daring adventurers from around the world always find their way to Lost Dutchman State Park and the picturesque Superstition Mountains. The park is comprised of traversing trails and vast desert landscapes that appear – deceptively – as if they last for miles upon miles. And let's be real, in this state they basically do.

But the towering buttes – best viewed during the golden hour when the soft sunlight makes the mountains seem almost gentle – are complemented by friendly flower blooms in the spring time. Whether you're camping, hiking or just absorbing the unreal views, Lost Dutchman State Park is the perfect daytrip opportunity, and a great excuse to take in the lovely wildflower fields that surround the towering mountains.

For more information on the hiking, camping, wildflower hotspots and general information about the park, visit the Lost Dutchman State Park official website.

Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument

Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument, an International Biosphere Reserve, is home to a thriving community of animals and plants. Particularly within the spring seasons, the monument serves as the home to dozens of different and wildly beautiful flower clusters. The otherwise barren-landscape transforms into a rainbow oasis, and the term "painted desert" takes full form and life at the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument.

As life abounds in the Sonoran Desert, visitors can embark on a scenic drive or hike, and catch a glimpse of the blooming wildlife in the process. For more trail details, tips on wildflower hotspots and general information regarding the monument, visit the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument official website.

Best Spots to See Wildflowers in Arizona

Written by Kyley Warren

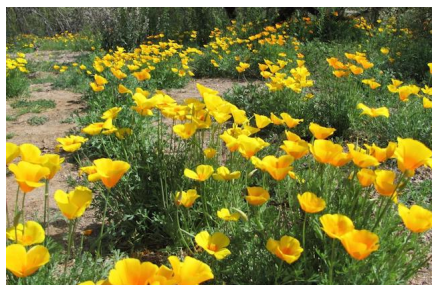

Monday, 15 April 2019 08:36 - Last Updated Thursday, 18 April 2019 12:11

Catalina State Park

As if Catalina State Park wasn't beautiful enough every other month of the year. Now, with the return of Arizona's glorious spring weather and more hours of warm daylight gracing the lands, the state has risen into a full bloom. And Tucson's very own Catalina State Park is certainly no exception.

The park is the perfect landscape for buzzing photographers, avid nature and wildlife geeks, and experienced campers looking for an escape outside the cluttered metropolitan area. For more information on campsites, hiking and trails, and general park insights, visit the Catalina State Park official website.

Saguaro National Park

When you think of Saguaro National Park, you might only imagine the towering and beastly cacti that comprise the area. Barren desert lands are accentuated by these emerald and crispy green beauties, and the Arizona sun serves as the plants' greatest ally, giving them the opportunity to grow to their fullest potential.

While the park definitely has garnered attention for its Saguaro cacti, don't discredit the wildflower scene within the park. Throughout the spring months, the desert floor serves as a prime space for these flowers to embody their full bloom.

For more information on hikes and general park information, visit the Saguaro National Park official website.

Picacho Peak State Park

Head down the I-10 between Tucson and Casa Grande during the spring months, and you'll have the opportunity to catch a glimpse of one of Arizona's finest landscapes at Picacho Peak State Park. The park is a postcard-worthy, picturesque scene of the desert lands recovering from the winter months and playing host to a wide array of wildflowers blossoming.

And the best part about Picacho Peak State Park is that if you like the environment and surrounding scenes enough, you're invited to stay on site at one of the park's clean campgrounds.

Best Spots to See Wildflowers in Arizona

Written by Kiley Warren

Monday, 15 April 2019 08:36 - Last Updated Thursday, 18 April 2019 12:11

For campground insights, hiking and trail information and general park facts, visit the Picacho Peak State Park official website.